Mrs. Astor's London Social

Astor has been acknowledged queen of New York and Newport society for some time, but only recently has London fallen to her charms as a hostess. How Mrs. Astor, when so many other American women have failed to win social triumphs in the English capital, arrived, was seen and conquered, makes a very interesting every.

That is, cheerful by comparison, for Mrs. Maybrick, whose articles on American prison life have been so interesting a feature of The World Magazine, would not have you think for a moment that there is anything attractive about life behind the bars. Her visits to tiery, and she tells why.

NEW HAVEN. Conn., April 28.—Yale and Pennsylvania met at Yale Field this afternoon for their final baseball game of the series. Yale won the first game in Philadelphia last week by the close score of 8 to 2, and the Penn team came here to-day expecting to even up. No arrangements were made to play a final in case Pennsy won to-day, and the Elis were confident that there would be no necessity of another contest.

DUEER LOOKING MONSTER DUG OUT OF ROCKS

Long, Hairy Animal Scared Workmen After a Blast on West Side.

Whether it was a jabberwock, a bandersnatch, a jub-jub bird or a snark that emerged from the bowels of the earth in this city to-day, causing thirty workmen to drop their tools of trade and take to the highest points in sight is a moted question. That it was something fully as bad as any beast in the late Mr. Carroll's menagerte, there can be no doubt. Zoologists are cordigily invited to the saloon at Sixty-fourth sreet and Amsterdam avenue to view it and pass an opinion on genus and habiworkmen, honest Irish sons of toil, with an Italian scattered here and there among them, were busily engaged today in making deeper the hole on Sixty-third street near Eleventh avenue, where the foundation for the first of richty Phipp's model tencinents is to be laid, when out from between the ruins of a giant rock which had just crumbled from blasting powder, came a queer hairy aminal, as long as a man, with legs like those of an oranoutains and a head the size of an oranoutains and a head the size of an orange.

A creature so ridiculously out of proportion according to modern standards could only be of some prehistoric monster, and however interesting such may be to naturalists, they are not the least bit so to the knights of the pick and the spade.

The little causter of whisker in the centre of old Terence McManus's throat stood out at a fearful angle when his eyes lighted on the creature. Then adown went Terry's plok into the earth and up went his voice to the heavins in a shriek that fair froze the blood in the veins of his comrades.

"Howly mither! Luk at it, luk at it!" wailed Terry, and, of course, everybody, took a took.

Then there was quick action, and in less than thirty seconds the monster had the hole to itself. Along the edges, scared, white faces peered over at it. They saw a iong, sinuous body and muscular legs, with these fierce talons at the end of each first. They saw a foolish little head in the centre of it, two beady black eyes. They saw Leisurely around the hole went the monster was a soattering of clisens at once. Big Pat Coughlin didn't get out of the way in time, and before he knew it the inclusive was close to him. Pat didn't wait to learn whether or not its intentions were hostile. He just swung the spade which he had clung to around at it and landed on the top of its little head. There was a crack and the monster rolled over for the cou among them, were busily engaged to-day in making deeper the hole on Six-
